Blues music

Blues music is often sad and emotional, which is why we say we have 'the blues' when we feel sad. Its main features are the 12-bar blues and the blues scale, and it includes a lot of improvisation.

Blues music began in the southern United States over 100 years ago and was created by African American communities as a way to express emotions, tell stories, and share experiences. It is known for its soulful sound, expressive singing, and the use of repeating patterns such as the 12-bar blues. Blues musicians often improvise using the blues scale, creating melodies that feel emotional, powerful, or reflective. The blues has influenced many modern genres, including rock, pop, R&B, and hip-hop, which means pupils may hear its style in lots of today's music.

Famous Blues Musicians

Etta James - A powerful blues and soul singer. Children may recognise her song "At Last", which is still used in films, TV, and adverts today.

Ray Charles - Blended blues, jazz, gospel, and soul. Famous songs like "Hit the Road Jack" are still popular and often appear in movies and games.

Aretha Franklin (influenced by blues) - Although mainly known for soul, her music is strongly shaped by blues traditions. Songs like "Respect" are still widely recognised by children.

Musical Features You May Notice

The 12-Bar Blues - A repeating 12-bar chord pattern that forms the structure of many blues songs.

Call and Response - A musical conversation:

- One musical idea is played or sung (call)
- Another phrase answers it (response).

Swing Rhythm - Blues often uses swing, where notes are played in a long-short pattern rather than evenly. This gives blues music its relaxed, "groovy" feel.

Expressive Vocals - Singers often use slides, growls, bending notes and emotional delivery to tell a story or express feelings.
